WRIGLEY FIELD

With its first major league game played here on April 23, 1914, the venerable, ivy-covered home of the Chicago Cubs is the nation's second-oldest major league ballpark. The original scoreboard is still used at Wrigley Field; score-by-innings, players' numbers, strikes, outs, hits, and errors are all posted manually. Die-hard fans opt for the bleachers, while the more genteel prefer box seats along the first and third baselines. If you look up along Sheffield Avenue on the east side of the park, you can see the rooftop patios where baseball fans pay high prices to cheer for the home team. Ticketless fans sit in lawn chairs on Sheffield during the games, waiting for foul balls to fly their way. Also check out the Harry Caray statue commemorating the late Cubs announcer; in the bottom half of the seventh inning, fans sing "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" in his honor. Tours of the park and the dugouts are given from April to October, when the Cubs are on the road.

NAVY PIER

Yes, it's a little schlocky, but Navy Pier is fun, especially for families. Everyone can fan out to shop in the mall, play 18-hole miniature golf in Pier Park in summer, see a movie at the IMAX Theatre, or explore the Chicago Children's Museum. Plus, there's a stained-glass museum, a fun-house maze with scenes of Chicago landmarks, and an old-fashioned swing ride. Meet up later at the Ferris wheel for a photo op or just settle on the pier with a drink and enjoy the view.

LINCOLN PARK ZOO

At this urban enclave near Lake Michigan, you can face off with lions outside the Kovler Lion House, watch about two dozen gorillas and chimpanzees in the sprawling Regenstein Center for African Apes, and see animals both slithering (pythons) and strange (sloths) in the glass-dome Regenstein Small Mammal and Reptile House. Inside the Lincoln Park Zoo, the big guys (hippos, giraffes, and black rhinos) are in the Regenstein Animal Journey, and bird lovers should make a beeline to the McCormick Bird House, containing extremely rare birds, some of which are extinct in the wild. The children's zoo, Farm-in-the-Zoo (farm animals and a learning center with films and demonstrations), and LPZoo Children's Train Ride appeal to youngsters.

WILLIS TOWER SKYDECK

Take the ear-popping ride to the 103rd floor of the Willis Tower (né the Sears Tower) to get to Skydeck Chicago, where on a clear day you can see as far as Michigan, Wisconsin, and Indiana. At the top, interactive exhibits feature notable Chicagoans; kids love Knee-High Chicago, a four-foot-high exhibit that has cutouts of Chicago sports, history, and cultural icons at a child's eye-level. Fearless folks can step out onto the Ledge, twin glass boxes extending 4.3 feet from the Skydeck and suspended a dizzying 1,353 feet above the city. Security is very tight, so figure in a little extra time for your visit.

MAGNIFICENT MILE

Exclusive shops, department stores, and boutiques line the northern half of swanky Michigan Avenue, better known as the Magnificent Mile. Even better, the concentration of prestigious stores in vertical malls means you can get a lot of shopping done in winter without venturing into the bluster outside. Originally designed by 19th-century architect Daniel Burnham, this famous section of Michigan Avenue is a potpourri of historic buildings, upscale boutiques, department stores, and posh hotels. Among its jewels are the Tribune Tower, the Wrigley Building, the John Hancock Center, the Drake Hotel, and the Historic Water Tower, one of the few structures that survived the Great Chicago Fire.

MUSEUM CAMPUS

Three of Chicago's most notable museums, all dedicated to the natural sciences, sit inside this 57-acre park on Lake Michigan. At the Field Museum, say hello to Sue, the gigantic T. rex, before immersing yourself in this extraordinary museum's collection of anthropological and paleontological artifacts and animal dioramas. The dinosaurs are the thing here, but surprising collections of Tibetan Buddhist altars, mummies, and re-creations of famous gems may entice you to linger for hours. The Shedd Aquarium's fantastically colored fish, as well as dolphins and whales, are completely mesmerizing. Don't miss the Wild Reef exhibit, where stingrays slide quietly under the Plexiglas at your feet. Taking you on a journey through the stars to unlock the mysteries of our galaxy and beyond, the Adler Planetarium tells amazing stories of space exploration through high-tech exhibits and immersive theater experiences. Interactive elements and real space artifacts bring these fascinating tales of space and its pioneers down to earth.

MILLENNIUM PARK

Downtown Chicago's parks are some of the finest in the country. In Millennium Park, make a beeline for Frank Gehry's Jay Pritzker Pavilion, where an incredible sound system allows audiences to enjoy concert-hall sound in the great outdoors. "The Bean," formally known as Cloud Gate, is a luminous polished-steel sculpture that plays tricks with the reflection of Chicago's skyline. In warmer months children of all ages can't resist a splash in the Crown Fountain, twin 50-foot towers that project close-up video images of Chicagoans "spitting" jets of water. In nearby Grant Park, you can see the iconic and impressive Buckingham Fountain.

DINING IN WEST LOOP

There's great food all over the city, but you'll find a high concentration of some of the city's finest restaurants in both the West Loop and River North. This is where you'll find chef Grant Achatz's Next Restaurant and The Aviary, the ever-popular neighbors Avec and Blackbird, and arguably the city's best burgers at Au Cheval. Need more suggestions? Check out our Chicago restaurant reviews, where you'll find more than 100 options listed for these two hot neighborhoods. Or you could just pick a street and explore—you're likely to find someplace that's tasty.

LOGAN SQUARE

One of the city's hippest corners is Logan Square, where you can have a fun night out eating and drinking at some of the neighborhood's buzziest spots. Start with dinner at beloved Lula Cafe, and then stop into Revolution Brewing for craft beers. Afterward, hit atmospheric cocktail dens like Longman & Eagle or Billy Sunday.
